

Students gain cash boost for dementia app

GLASGOW students have won £6,000 in funding to launch a new app designed to help those with dementia.

MindMate combines a number of techniques including brain games, physical exercises, reminders and nutrition advice, which the students found can slow memory loss and enhance the lives of people with dementia.

Students from the University of Glasgow and the University of Strathclyde worked with the University of Glasgow's geriatric medicine department to develop the app.
